On December 6, 1989, an armed man walked into an Engineering class at l'École Polytechnique de Montréal. After forcing the men to leave, he said he hated feminists. He started shooting the women in the class, then beyond it. At the end of his killing rampage, he shot himself.

As a result of these acts of violence, and the link women made between these acts and everyday sexism, Canada established December 6 as the National Day of Remembrance & Action on Violence Against Women. The day not only marks the anniversary of the massacre, but also reminds us of acts of gender-based violence against women in Canada and around the world. As a day of action, it prompts us to take steps to end violence against women.
